Disputes and Litigation Support

Technical support for law firms and legal departments, from the initial assessment of a claim to the quantification of the judgment.

The technical side of a dispute has to be understood before it is argued.

What the amount in dispute is, where it comes from, which documents support it and what the other side may challenge. SGEx turns economic, accounting and asset-related facts into technical analysis for those running the dispute, without taking on a legal role.

When clients call on SGEx

Technical assessment of a claim before filing or notice.

Preparing documents and questions for the expert evidence phase.

Responding to the other side's expert reports, opinions and calculations.

Negotiation or mediation that needs a defensible basis for value.

Quantification and enforcement of judgments.

How SGEx works

Before the proceeding

Assessing the technical soundness of a claim before it is brought.

During the evidence phase

Questions to the expert, document organization and responses to reports and opinions.

Through to quantification

Calculations for the quantification and enforcement of judgments.

Points of disagreement are set out so that counsel and decision-makers can follow them.

What We Solve

The technical questions in a dispute.

What is the claim really worth?

Economic size of claims and counterclaims.

Do the documents support the amount?

Adequacy and organization of supporting documents.

Is the other side's methodology appropriate?

Review of the quantification methods adopted by each party.

Where do the reports diverge?

Identifying and explaining the technical points of disagreement.

What does the contract provide?

Effects of contractual clauses on the amounts owed.

How should the amount be updated?

Adjustment, interest and charges applicable to the amounts in dispute.

How We Approach It

Steps applied to this type of engagement.

1
Technical map

Identifying the technical questions in the dispute.

2
Documents

Pointing to the documents that answer each question.

3
Calculation

Building or reviewing the calculations in dispute.

4
Disagreements

Clearly recording the points in dispute and their size.

What we examine: pleadings, expert reports and opinions, contracts, financial statements, the parties' calculations and the supporting documents for each head of claim.

Deliverables: technical assessment of the claim, technical opinion, questions and technical submissions, review of expert reports and judgment quantification calculations.
